Possible solutions: df -L output file that does not have the -rwxrwxr-x Å· Files in nautilus of the sizes of more than 100MB are still not shown. However, if the file size is very small (less than or equal to 100MB, for example 10MB), then this problem will not occur. I use a PC with 8 GB RAM. I also do not use an SSD (at least now not), but use a hard disk. I am using Ubuntu 10.04 LTS. I have checked some possible solutions for these problems, but to no avail. I am in no way familiar with these things, but somehow I just do not know where to start. I have searched a lot on the Internet, and have seen many suggestions and tutorials, but they all consist of various advice and recommendations for various operating systems, which I am unfamiliar with. Some of these suggestions include: remove.thumbnails folder from ~/Photos remove those Photos/fine.png files restore your precious photos from your backup delete the thumbnails cache files reinstall the thumbnails package give thumbnails enough disk space Which of these suggestions would be most appropriate for my case? Are all of these possible solutions okay, or are some of them not appropriate? If not, please explain. A: As written in the comment this was a problem due to the SSD I used for my computer. When the hard disk (my 16 GB SSD) is full of data and after using some applications, the data from those applications are saved temporarily in the memory area of the RAM (random access memory). In my case, for the applications that store the data in the RAM, the filesystem for the SSD was filled up and created a new.thumbnails folder, with.thumbnails.db inside it. I guess the new folder in your case was too large, but the keys and the data saved inside it do not really fill up the memory area, but fill up the SSD. As a result you only see the thumbnails of the last 100MB of your files on your computer. Search It's been a while since I played with my camera, and, in fact, it's been months since my last post was an actual photo of my cat. So, it's time to pull up the camera and start taking some pictures again.

Development and validation of a norm-referenced instrument for assessing the self-concept of individuals with Down syndrome. A norm-referenced instrument was developed and validated to assess the self-concept of school-aged children and adolescents with Down syndrome. The 91 items of the instrument were based on the following theoretical considerations: (a) the participants were examined because of their impairment of the ability to use social cues to know themselves, (b) the participants' self-concept was conceptualized as a single construct (e.g., identity), and (c) the participants' self-concept was considered to be an important indicator of their competence. This instrument was applied to 194 school-aged children and adolescents with Down syndrome. A confirmatory factor analysis of the self-concept construct found support for the two-factor structure of the self-concept (self-evaluation vs. social acceptance).

Intercorrelations between the self-concept factors were moderate and moderate-to-high with the other facets of identity and competence, respectively.

The validity of the instrument was supported by its stability and its association with the level of general competence and
