The long-term goal of our research is to understand the mechanisms by which cells respond to stress and, thereby, avoid or correct the deleterious changes in gene expression that lead to apoptosis and cell death. The initial phase of the stress response requires that the cell activate its DNA repair apparatus to eliminate the DNA damage caused by the stress. Our recent data has shown that the cellular response to stress can also be altered by the presence of reactive oxygen species, and that, in this context, the DNA damage-induced stress response can function as a signal for cell death and senescence. The goal of this proposal is to understand how these processes are regulated.
